

Dr. Khoo completed his Internal Medicine Training at the University of Toronto in 2008 and went on to the University of BC where he completed his Cardiology Training in 2011. He continued at the University of BC where he completed a two year fellowship in Electrophysiology at St. Paul's Hospital.

He has been a practicing cardiac electrophysiologist in the section of Cardiology at St. Boniface Hospital since 2013. Dr. Khoo's research interests include the management of atrial fibrillation, inherited arrhythmias and syncope.

He is presently an Associate Professor of Medicine at the University of Manitoba, Director of Arrhythmia Services for Cardiac Sciences, Manitoba and Program Director for the Postgraduate Cardiology Training Program.